

FSHD Community Meetings

FSHD Global is taking to the road to visit our community. We are inviting people living with FSHD, their friends, and family to an informal community meeting. This is an opportunity to meet with other members of our community, hear an update on the Foundations vision and plans for 2017 including our events, in addition to finding out how you can become more involved in assisting us to find treatments and a cure for FSHD.

We also want to hear what is important to you!
Please contact us if you wish to attend or would like more information.
We look forward to seeing you there!

FSHD Global Medical Research Update

Israel- Australia Collaborative Tender

FSHD Global Research Foundation has issued a tender for an Israel-Australia Collaborative Medical Research Grant. Both Israel and Australia have strong academic ties and a similar heritage in biomedical research. The Foundation would like to foster research ties between the two countries and leverage respective expertise in order to advance the field of FSHD research. The Foundation has always encouraged scientific collaboration and is excited to see what international connections this tender inspires.

Therapeutics Tender

Development of new therapies for people with FSHD is the principle aim of FSHD Global Research Foundation. Currently, there are no effective treatments and no cure. As part of the Foundations commitment to finding a cure for FSHD, we are calling for high-quality research projects that address this issue. Projects may be basic science, clinical or translational. However, all must demonstrate the potential for the discoveries to be developed into treatments for people with FSHD. In particular, we will be looking for projects where consideration about the path to commercialisation has been undertaken.

FSHD Global Research Grant 23 Update

Bone Health in FSHD

In a first for the FSHD field, a study has been published looking closely at the morbidity of low bone density and bone fracture risk in patients suffering from FSHD. The FSHD Global Research Foundation played a particularly proactive role in supporting this study beyond just financial support, including advocating for not only United States patients but also Australian patients from a Centre of Excellence in FSHD research at Concord Hospital in NSW to be included in the study. The findings are therefore of international significance. Moreover, a key member of the scientific committee of FSHD Global, Dr. Scott Baker, himself an endocrinologist provided expert comments on the design of the study which were acknowledged in the paper.

The study characterised 94 patients with FSHD. One of the key findings of the study was that there is a correlation between strength, physical function and bone density. This could have implications for the clinical management of FSHD patients, for example, it may be wise to use a lack of strength and physical function to prompt more frequent scans of bone density. It was also noted that there was a high prevalence of abnormal Vitamin D3 levels. Fascinatingly the risk of fractures was 48% in Australia versus 25% in the United States.

Overall the study indicated a high variability in bone density and other characteristics, and having FSHD does not automatically mean a patient has low bone density. However, the prevalence of mostly traumatic fractures in the patient group overall was high. It is the hope of the Foundation that this research paper will draw attention to this important clinical feature of FSHD patients and improve the standards of care not only in Australia but also in other countries.
